Preliminary Notes

The German General Social Survey (ALLBUS) 2021 was conducted as a self-administered mixed-mode survey. The participants had the choice between a paper questionnaire (mode MAIL) and a web-based questionnaire (mode CAWI). While the two survey modes covered the same range of questions, there are a number of mode-specific differences between the survey instruments. First and foremost, this pertains to the way participants are routed through the questionnaire. Routing in MAIL-mode cannot be as complex as in CAWI-mode, because participants must actively follow instructions to navigate through the interview. Consequently, the survey instruments sometimes diverge structurally. The ALLBUS/GGSS 2021 MAIL questionnaire, for example, uses a single question to ask for information about the participants' mother and father whereas the CAWI questionnaire uses two consecutive questions with individual wording to ask for the same information. The second area where the CAWI and MAIL questionnaires systematically diverge is question layout. In the ALLBUS/GGSS 2021 MAIL questionnaire, most item batteries are, for example, presented in a matrix layout whereas in CAWI mode, item batteries are more often split into individual screens.

In addition to the mode split, the survey design also included a three-way split with a varying range of questions included in each split. Thus, in practice a total of six individual survey instruments were used in the field. As the primary goal of the English translation of the German General Social Survey (ALLBUS) has always been to let interested researchers know what was asked in the surveys rather than how a question was asked, no effort has been made to replicate the actual survey instruments used in the field. Instead, this document provides a standardized, mode-neutral documentation of the questions fielded in ALLBUS/GGSS 2021.

Each question in ALLBUS/GGSS 2021 is documented in 3 main parts:

1. a header containing the question id in the different questionnaire versions, the names of the variable or variables resulting from this question and the split version this variable was part of
2. the filter conditions for this question
3. the question text including, if applicable, the sub-questions or items associated with this question and the answer scale.

The information in the header connects the question documentation with the original questionnaires as well as the data. It indicates whether a question was fielded in one or both survey modes and in which split versions the question was fielded. The 'Filter' section documents the routing of participants as a verbalised backward-looking filter condition. The question text section documents a mode-neutral version of the question used in the field. This means that, wherever possible, the documented question texts use the same wording as the actual questionnaires. Mode-specific text elements, however, are either translated in a mode-neutral way or omitted. Instructions are mostly translated in a mode neutral way, whereas transitional text, e.g. where item batteries are spread over individual screens in CAWI-mode, are omitted. Similarly, the routing instructions in the MAIL questionnaire are not documented as part of the question text. Instead, the applicable filter conditions for both CAWI- and MAIL-mode are documented in the field 'Filter'. Where the two survey modes diverge because of simplified routing, this translation documents the context-specific wording. This reflects both the intended measurement and the structure of the data set. Finally, question texts and answer scales are presented in a generic layout. All answer scales are, for example, arranged vertically, irrespective of the layout used in the original survey instruments. Graphic elements, like icons or grids, are generally not reproduced.

Our translations are not heavily annotated. Occasionally we provide additional information, more frequently we quote the original text to clarify reference (e.g. concerning occupational qualifications). In both cases we use square brackets '[...]' to identify comments.
